A woman slashed a straphanger across her forehead in an unprovoked attack during a ride on the No. 5 train Sunday, officials and witnesses said.

Cops arrested Jacqueline Sanjurjo, 53, of the Bronx, in the grisly attack. She was charged with two counts of assault, criminal possession of a weapon and acting in a manner injurious to a child, officials said.

The 31-year-old victim, identified by family members as Anna Martinez, was with her infant son on the southbound subway near Grand Central Station about 11 a.m. when the attacker knifed her face.

Woman attacked with a knife on uptown subway ride near Grand Central Paramedics rushed Martinez to Bellevue Hospital. The baby was not hurt.

"That crazy lady! She cut her face," raged Martinez's mother, Anna Flores.

Sanjurjo mumbled to reporters as she was led away by detectives. "They made me take my baby!" she yelled. "I'm being framed."
